

Intro to American Myth: Baseball and American Culture

CES 101

Instructor: James Goldsmith

Email: jgoldsmi@bellevuecollege.edu

During the next several weeks, we'll be reading baseball, watching baseball video, listening to baseball music, talking baseball, writing baseball, eating & sleeping & drinking baseball, dreaming baseball, nightmaring baseball. Man! If you don't have a high capacity for baseball, you're in the wrong place!

Required Texts and Materials

Course Description

This course requires a major time commitment. If you can't budget the required 10+ hours per week, you will probably struggle. Why, the running time of Burns' Baseball video alone exceeds 25 hours. Then there are the movies. Your reading will demand many hours. Good writing takes time. Your online hours will add up. You'll be spending a good chunk of your life engaged in online "discussion."

We will examine the history of baseball in America. You will learn surprising information about the mythic origins of the game. Also, how the history of baseball has in part mirrored the development of the nation. We will see how baseball has evolved in the last 170 or so years, and see the game today in the perspective of the past. Many of the issues of today—economics, race, class and gender—have been a part of baseball, too. You will become versed in important events in the history of baseball, and learn about many of the storied players, managers and others that make the game so colorful. In other words, you will become a student of the game, able to speak of players, issues, strategy. Your enjoyment of the game will thus become richer, and you will appreciate its special beauty.

Here's some of the good stuff we'll be doing:

- Detail the surprising origins of Our National Pastime, as well as its growth.
- Evaluate myths that baseball has evoked, such as its pastoral nature and fulfillment of the Jeffersonian ideal.
- Place the game in historical, economical, and sociological contexts in eras ranging from the mid 19th century.
- Analyze issues affecting baseball and society, including race, gender and class; gambling; globalization; and drug use.
- Create projects that will inform and entertain your fellow students (and me).
- Recognize the names and roles of the sport's most historically influential people.
- Pick and justify an all-time All-Star team.

Class Policies and Expectations

- You are responsible for all assigned work. This includes knowing assignments, getting instructions right and turning in all work in a timely manner.
- You will read and comply with the policy statement of the Arts and Humanities Division.
- You must complete satisfactorily complete every assignment in order to be eligible for a passing grade. For more on this read "Course Requirements" below.

Attendance

If this were a "live" course, this would be the policy:

Missing class excessively can prevent you from passing. If your absences exceed 20% of class meetings, you cannot get a passing grade. Arriving late and leaving early can count as partial absence.

In the on-line environment, frequent participation is also paramount. You come and go as you please, since there is never a particular time when we all "meet" together. There are, however, strict limits on taking quizzes and tests, but these offer a window of many hours, sometimes a full day.

Experience tells me that those who spend little time checking in almost never do well. While frequent "attendance" offers no assurance of a high grade, it at least puts you in position to do well.

It is unacceptable to start the course several days late, offering an explanation about travel or other commitments. You signed up for the course aware of the BCC academic calendar. Due dates, and the grace period for late work, are non negotiable. I always listen sympathetically to the reasons a student might be turning in work late, but I never accept these reasons as excuses. To be fair, it works like this: late is late.

In order to be eligible for a passing grade, a student must complete ALL assignments in a timely manner--even the smallest, seemingly insignificant or idiotic assignment!

Each assignment will have a due date and a "last acceptable late date." Late assignments will lose points at a drastic, apparently heartless rate. If the assignment is not turned in by the "last acceptable late date," the student will no longer be eligible for a passing grade.

Here's a summary of how grades will be calculated (subject to change):

Introductory exercises	10
Book chapter quizzes (10)	100
Book chapter discussions (10)	100
Burns' film discussion (10)	45
Essay discussions (9)	90
Novel discussion	15
Movie discussions	15
Mid term exam	100
Final exam	150

You will find details about these various items as you get into the course. Please note that if it becomes necessary to alter the assignment list, the point total will change as well.

Notice:

If you require accommodation based on a documented disability, have emergency medical information to share, or need special arrangements in case of emergency evacuation, please make an appointment with me as soon as possible.

If you would like to inquire about becoming a DSS student you may call 425-564-2498 or go in person to the DSS (Disability Support Services) reception area in the Student Services Building

Another Notice:

As in all college courses, writing quality counts. It counts in your exams; it counts in your everyday discussion posts and emails. If your writing contains significant error, it will lose points. If you would like help with your writing, help is available:

The Writing Lab – D204

www.bellevuecollege.edu/writinglab

The Writing Lab is a place where students can work on developing college-level writing skills. Students can come to the Writing Lab (not more than once per day) for individual help on revising their writing for class, college applications, or personal projects. Tutors can listen to ideas and ask questions to help students focus on one topic; help them learn how to correct and avoid punctuation and grammar errors; and review papers to ensure they are clear and follow the assignment. However, tutors do not edit papers!

While students can drop in any time the Writing Lab is open, it is better to make an appointment at least two days before a paper is due by calling 425-564-2200. If students do not have an appointment and all of the tutors are busy, they may have to wait or come back later.
