Pre-requisite: None; however, Introduction to Political Science (POLS& 101) and/or or similar introductory Social Science course would be an advantage.

Course Description

This introductory course seeks to identify and analyze the patterns and processes that arise from the interactions of states, international organizations, and the several other actors which comprise our complex and interdependent world. Many of the concerns of this course-from war and peace to currency fluctuations and economic recessions, terrorism to global warming, and the North-South gap to human trafficking—are being shaped by the far-reaching processes of globalization, a theme that runs throughout the course. Although the Cold War is long past, the environment of world politics continues to show both conflict and cooperation, a duality that can only be understood through the lenses of theory and the historical experience. We will treat both these aspects as we tease out the processes that are at work in contemporary IR and treat the specific challenges that we face as a global community in the twenty-first century. Chief among these challenges are international peace and security—including environmental security—global welfare and justice, and resource scarcity.

WHY TAKE THIS COURSE?

- War, global warming, human trafficking, hunger, etc. affect us all, and we must all understand their causes and sources to remedy them.
- Understanding more fully humankind's most challenging issues will make you a more informed global citizen.
- Many of you will be leaders and assume positions of responsibility in various fields; and the more aware and knowledgeable you are about our major problems, the more likely you are to be an agent of change or the betterment of your community and the world.
- IR will help you in your career by teaching you to write, think, and speak more clearly and persuasively.
- Critical thinking, presenting a good argument, and writing effectively are part of any career, and this course provides ample opportunities to develop these competencies.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

On completion of this course students should:

- Demonstrate high-order grasp of the key concepts and approaches that form the core of the sub-field of international relations.
- Use the core concepts and approaches of IR to interpret global developments and patterns.
- Understand how global governance operates in the international system and the role of institutions and processes in fostering global order.
- Understand the challenges, opportunities, and constraints upon states and other global actors in the international arena.
- Think critically and make informed judgments about contemporary world politics.
- Demonstrate improved research, writing, conceptual, and analytical skills
- Understand the application of IR to daily life.
- Demonstrate a range of global competencies—cultural, environmental, inter alia.

Success Tips

Read the course Syllabus and the other resource materials from the Distance Education Office carefully first, contribute meaningfully to all the weekly discussions, submit assignments according to the Calendar, keep up with current affairs through the recommended supplemental sources below, take full advantage of the teaching and learning resources at the Interactive Student Resource site, and be sure to check frequently for any announcements.

Required Text

Please purchase this text at the BC Bookshop: (Note: Discussions draw on this and other instructor resources.)

Kegley, Charles W. Jr. & Gregory A. Raymond. The Global Future: A Brief Introduction to World Politics, Fourth Ed., With Passcode. Wadsworth Cengage), 2012. ISBN: ISBN is 9781111627737.

Supplemental Reading

Students are encouraged to follow current affairs issues in at least one off these sources on a regular basis: The Monitor (online), The Guardian Weekly, The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Economist, Far Eastern Economic Review, and The Financial Times (London) Also highly recommended: PRI's "The World" http://www.theworld.org/), BBC (http://www.bbc.co.uk/), and Yale Global Online (http://yaleglobal.yale.edu/). These resources will help round out understanding and connect the concepts and theories introduced in the course to real-world situations of power, interests, conflict and cooperation. Give special attention to the current global economic and financial crises, international trade issues, institutions such as the WTO, NAFTA, IMF, and World Bank, IOs (UN and EU), NGOs (Greenpeace and Human Rights Watch, etc.), "commons" issues, incl. global warming, human rights, and terrorism, "hot-spots" such as the Middle East and South Asia, and the Peninsula, the G-8 and G-20, and, of course, great-power politics.
